"Most Canadians are paying compound interest. We help them earn it."

THE Ayme Strategy

Your mortgage is costing you more than you think.

The average Canadian homeowner loses idle in Canadian chequing accounts, earning the bank money â€" not you.

$400B+

$8,000

saved on the same $100K â€" same income, same payments, different structure.

of Canadians feel they can no longer afford the home they live in.

thousands in interest every year â€" not because they got a bad deal, but because of how their banking is structured.

The AYME strategy fixes the structure itself. Same income, same payments â€" fundamentally different result.

HOW IT WORKS

Three things your bank won't tell you

Your cash is working against you

Every dollar sitting in your chequing account is a dollar the bank profits from â€" while your mortgage balance stays exactly the same. Most people don't realize this is a choice, not a requirement.

won't tell you.

and why it's costing you.

The AYME strategy is built on structural changes – not sacrifices. No extra payments. No lifestyle changes. Just a smarter system.

2

It's not about the rate

You could get a lower rate and still pay more over the life of your mortgage. The way your money flows day-to-day matters far more than the number on your contract.

There are 3 structural changes that flip the equation

Small shifts in how your banking and mortgage work together. These aren't tricks – they're the same principles the banks use for themselves.

Book a 15-minute reviewWHY I DO THIS*Borna Alavi Parsi

Mortgage Agent (Level 1)

Early in my career, I noticed something that stuck with me: two families could buy similar homes, earn similar incomes, and sign mortgages in the same market — then end up in completely different places. One spent years feeling the weight of their mortgage. The other used equity and leverage to build wealth. Same product. Opposite outcomes.

The difference was almost never the rate. It was how the mortgage was built, and whether someone took the time to run the math before the emotion took over.

That's what pulled me to Guardian Mortgages. Our mission is to change lives through financial literacy, built on three principles: guidance in your choices, protection of your assets, and care in the process.

When a mortgage is set up the right way, it stops being something you survive and starts being something that works for you. That's the outcome I'm here to help you reach.
